

Neil Davidson trained as a youth worker, and has been involved in developing work with boys and young men since 1982, with a focus on sex and relationships education. During the 1980's he worked for New Grapevine (a pioneering youth project in London), then for Save The Children. He was a co-founder of Working With Men, and then a full-time consultant for Working with Men from 1991 to 2006. This involved the development of work with men and boys through training, consultancy and the production of resources. He then became Bristol Local Authorities Sex Education consultant, working with primary and secondary schools throughout the city, and continued to develop teaching resources, focusing on SRE.

Throughout, Neil's focus has been on understanding masculinity and gender, and making this accessible, and practical to mainstream work with young people.

His publications include:

The Extra Large Guide to Sex and Relationships for Young Men...

Working With Men (2008).

Man2Man – An investigation into the views of fathers and sons about the father's role in sex and relationship education. Working With Men (2006).

Editor for Working with Young Men a journal for professionals working in education criminal justice and social inclusion. Working With Men (2002-06).

Building Bridges – Integrating school, sex and relationship education and contraceptive services for young men Working With Men (2003).

'Promoting Men's Health' (with Trefor Lloyd) Balliere Tyndall (2000).

'Health-related resources for MEN' (with Trefor Lloyd) Health Education Authority, (1999).

'Fatherhood Game and Pack' (with Trefor Lloyd) Working With Men (1999).

'Men's Sexual Health Matters' Healthlink (1998).

'Vitality and Virility – Sexual Health for Mid-life Men' Ace Books (1995).

Boys Will Be ...? – Sex Education and Young Men' 1991 (reprinted 1997).